Harbor Conflicts

Editor:
The lawsuit filed last week against the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District, its commissioners and CEO Jack Crider alleging conflict of interest violations (“Conflict of Interest Alleged,” Oct. 8) has no merit based on an initial evaluation of the pleading, according to Humboldt Bay Harbor District Counsel Paul Brisso. The lawsuit alleges that the district illegally entered into a transaction with Coast Seafoods, the employer of Commissioner Greg Dale, in which Dale engaged in a conflict of interest.

Brisso publicly outlined the defense of Dale at the commission’s last meeting Oct. 8. Dale has also sought multiple opinions from other attorneys and all are confident he does not fit any of the criteria of conflict. Not only that, Dale has recused himself on all issues involving Coast Seafoods.

As president of the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District, it is my personal belief that this lawsuit was filed to smear Dale and the timing of it was designed to disrupt the electoral process. Political grandstanding at its worst.

Editor:

In South Carolina, people’s homes flood to the rooftops, but here in Humboldt County, our Board of Supervisors wants to change zoning laws to allow homes to be built in flood plains, short-term profits for developers being their only concern.

The same financial backers that got that mentality elected are now gunning to take control of our Harbor Commission (“Bay Battle,” Oct. 8). Their goal: to bring deep-port shipping to Humboldt Bay and find a way to justify building an eastbound railroad to the Central Valley.

They hope to replace Greg Dale and Pat Higgins, who, as outlined in a recent NCJ article (“Safe Harbor,” Oct. 1), have worked to clean up the pulp mill, increased aquaculture and finally have turned the commission’s finances around, slowly getting it in the black.

They are attacking Dale of Coast Seafoods for having a bay-dependent job, which they complain is a “conflict of interest.” In the past, being a commercial fisherman, or the wife of one, was considered a qualification to serve on the Harbor Commission, but now these financier fatcats are trying to convince voters that working for a fish wholesaler — without which there would be no Humboldt fishing industry — is a reason to oust an incumbent harbor commissioner. It would be laughable if it weren't so depressing.

You see, if, for example we allow for more aquaculture jobs, then there will be a financial argument for keeping our waterways clean. Further, deep-port shipping will essentially shut down much of Humboldt Bay's commercial (and sport) fishing industry, so opponents have good and self-serving reasons to want knowledgeable commissioners like Dale gone and to hoodwink us into buying their absurd and fabricated claims.

Editor:

I appreciate the informative articles in the North Coast Journal. I had been out of the area for a while and had wondered what was happening to the site of the Samoa Pulp Mill. When I first arrived in Eureka in 1967, the smell of the pulp mill was a daily, not too pleasant fact of life. It was good to read of the efforts of the Harbor District, and the progress being made.

Linda Stansberry's excellent articles on addiction highlighted the scale of the problem in Humboldt County, and the (limited) resources available ("What's Killing Us?," Sept. 10 and "Can Humboldt County Solve Addiction?," Sept. 24). I would also like to point out that numerous people are affected by the addiction of another. These include many children. The effects range from anxiety and depression and difficulty concentrating in school, to financial difficulties, domestic violence, homelessness and poverty.

There is support for those affected by someone else's addiction. Nar. Anon is an anonymous fellowship where experience, strength and hope are shared with others who understand. We meet every Thursday evening at 6:45 p.m. at Arcata Methodist Church, 1761 11th St. Room 7.

Editor:

How refreshing to read an article about bicycling that is well-written, well-researched and informative ("No Contest," Oct. 8).

In particular, I would like to praise the quote from Susan B. Anthony stating the bicycle "has done more to emancipate women than anything else in the world".

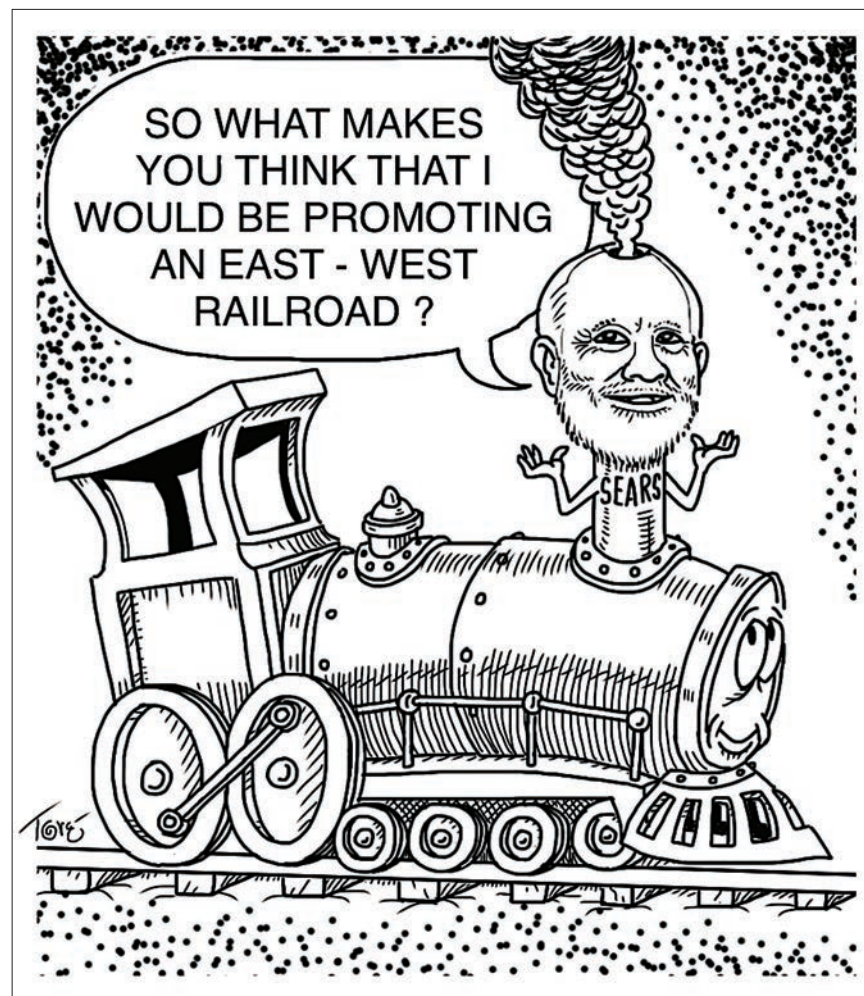

No suburban, car-grounded attitude from this writer — Barry Evans acknowledges the importance of bicycles as transportation. Why, when we are facing a grim future of devastating climate change due, largely, upon our addiction to fossil fuels (not to mention our distinction as the fattest nation in the first world), ought this be such a challenge?

term as Harbor Commissioner. As someone who makes his living on the bay, he has a stake in ensuring that our harbor remains viable economically as well as ecologically.

The North Coast's economic future is linked quite closely to effective, sustainable development and use of Humboldt Bay. We need people managing this resource who have knowledge, experience and a commitment to stewardship of this priceless resource. Greg has this knowledge, experience and commitment.

Bay Battle: Round 2

2nd District Harbor Candidates on the future of Humboldt Bay

By Grant Scott-Goforth

Last week the Journal featured profiles of candidates for the Humboldt Bay Harbor, Recreation and Conservation District's 5th District seat, a race that sees starkly different philosophies about the purpose of the agency and the future of the bay.

That divide holds true for the 2nd District race as well, where challenger Nick Angeloff and incumbent Greg Dale are vying for a four-year term on the harbor commission.

Dale, who was appointed to the harbor commission in 2011, says he believes the district has been on the right track with its acquisition of the Samoa Pulp Mill, expansion of mariculture and diversification of economic opportunities on the bay.

Dale, who lives in Fortuna, is the southwest operations manager for Coast Seafoods, a thriving oyster producer on Humboldt Bay. That role recently put him at the center of a conflict of interest lawsuit against the district and its sitting commissioners, which claims Dale inappropriately negotiated a $1.25 million loan from Coast Seafoods to the Harbor District to pay for the shipping of caustic liquors from the Samoa Pulp Mill site. Dale and Harbor Commission President Richard Marks have dismissed the suit, saying Dale recused himself from voting on the loans and was well within the law, and decried the timing of the filing — a month before the election — as a political ploy.

At a Sept. 30 debate, Dale said the district has a number of visioning plans that are “by and large ... in the implementation stage.” Those include plans to relieve the North Bay of heavier industrial activity, making it more suitable for an expansion of oyster farming and other mariculture.

“[The Harbor District] spent the last 15 years marketing the port, it dredged channels. We marketed this port almost to bankruptcy.”

— Greg Dale

Shipping and heavier industrial use has been guided toward the central bay, he said, where Green Diamond invested $8 million in wood chip shipping improvements, but, Dale said, the district has been wise to move away from a singular focus on shipping.

“The market dictates a lot of the activity here,” he said.

“One idea and plan was to market this port, and I was part of this plan,” Dale continued. “And I agreed with what the plan said. [The Harbor District] spent the last 15 years marketing the port, it dredged channels. We marketed this port almost to bankruptcy.”

And while Dale said he's not against robust shipping from Humboldt Bay, he said there has to be a business that wants to operate out of here. So far, that hasn't come to fruition. So the current board focused on diversification, while protecting the fishing fleet and expanding the mariculture industry, he said. One way to protect the fishing industry, he said, was to raise slip fees and make changes on Woodley Island, including loosening zoning on the island and building a second restaurant. While that may seem counterintuitive, Dale said the marina was losing hundreds of thousands of dollars per year, and needed more revenue. “We were going to lose the marina,” he said.

And he said he and others on the current commission have been open to a variety of potential markets. “The current board is not opposed to moving on any viable project,” he said. “It's not the Harbor District's business to make jobs — they can only facilitate infrastructure.”

Angeloff, an archaeologist from Rio Dell, isn't satisfied with the Harbor District's diversification.

He lambasted the commission for turning the district's focus toward conservation, recreation and businesses like oyster farms and away from large scale shipping. At a Sept. 30 debate, he said the 15 years the district spent marketing “entail a period of time where the national and Humboldt economy in particular were in serious economic downturn.” He said looking into other economic opportunities — even as shipping dwindled to a halt in Humboldt Bay — amounted to “voodoo economics.”

Other ports knew better, he said. “Effectively, what they did was modernize their facilities, knowing that the economy was coming back, and attract more market share to their district.”

Shipping out of Humboldt Bay last year amounted to about 500,000 tons of material, far less than was shipped in the years before the 2008 recession. Angeloff has alternately said the port could ship 5 million or 10 million tons if the district pre-permitted replacing docks and the development of a new green port.

Angeloff has repeatedly said he's met with Central Valley agricultural producers who “had no idea” that they could ship products through Humboldt Bay. “If [the Harbor District] had been marketing as they should have been, [agricultural producers would] know there was option to ship through Humboldt Bay.”

Speaking on the phone last week, Angeloff declined to name those producers, saying the negotiations were confidential, though he said they were “all very impressed with the opportunity our harbor affords.”

Corroborating Angeloff's Central Valley visits is retired rice farmer Bill Hewler

Carlson, whose number Angeloff provided. Carlson said he and Angeloff did “a little groundwork” with rice brokers and millers in the Sacramento Valley, and said there was interest in Humboldt Bay, as other ports sometimes become overwhelmed with traffic, though he acknowledged that proper trucking and infrastructure for container shipping are lacking locally.

Angeloff said he’s been promoting investment in Humboldt Bay on his own “dime and time” for years. “Recently it has led me to bring investors to our port from Washington DC, New York, Hawaii, Shanghai and Beijing,” he said at his campaign announcement. But, similarly, he declines to mention who these investors are or their reactions to their visits to Humboldt Bay.

“If [the Harbor District] had been marketing as they should have been, [agricultural producers would] know there was option to ship through Humboldt Bay.”

— Nick Angeloff

But Angeloff said shipping is the key to well-paying union jobs.

Like Susan Rotwein, who’s running for the 5th District commission seat, and Larry Doss, who took the 1st District unopposed, Angeloff has cast doubts on the wisdom of the Harbor District’s purchase of the old Samoa Pulp Mill, saying it was a bad decision to go into debt to the Environmental Protection Agency and Coast Seafoods, which allowed for the cleanup of the site. The EPA will forgive the debt in seven years, and Coast Seafoods recently negotiated an extended lease on mariculture tidelands in exchange for the loan it made to the district.

Angeloff declined to comment on the lawsuit filed against Dale and the district, referring the Journal to comments he made during a Fortuna Chamber of Commerce debate in September. The chamber does not record its meetings, and it’s unclear what those statements were.

At the Sept. 30 debate, Angeloff called for a forensic audit of the district’s budget, and said grant funding, mariculture and aquaculture will not fund the recreation and conservation improvements that the current commission has moved toward.

“If, and only if, we refocus efforts on shipping,” Angeloff said, “will we have a strong economic base.” ●

Anti-Vax Measure Coughs, Dies

Efforts to repeal California's new mandatory vaccination law have failed.

Signed in June by Gov. Jerry Brown, the new law requires that all children be vaccinated for a variety of infectious diseases before attending school, closing a long-standing exemption for families that opted not to vaccinate due to religious or personal beliefs. The law has faced a fierce backlash from parents who fear vaccinating imperils their children's health or violates their religious beliefs, and see the law as an infringement on their rights. A repeal effort launched almost immediately.

It's been clear for some time, however, that the effort was struggling uphill toward getting a repeal measure on the November ballot. Supports of the repeal raised less than $175,000 to pay for professional signature gathering, far short of their stated goal of $750,000. And the California Secretary of State's Office reported that it had received fewer than 234,000 signatures in support of the measure, less than two-thirds of the 366,000 valid signatures needed to get the measure on the ballot.

It's interesting to note, however, that 1,790 of those signatures came from Humboldt County, which is a hotbed of anti-vaccination sentiment. (That's more signatures than were collected in San Francisco County, which boasts a population roughly six times that of Humboldt.)

According to the California Department of Public Health, Humboldt County has the second-lowest vaccination rate for incoming kindergartners of the state's 58 counties, trailing only Nevada County. According to the statistics, only 75 percent of Humboldt's incoming kindergartners for the 2014-2015 school year had all their required immunizations. The state average was 90 percent.

Some Humboldt schools reported incoming kindergarten classes in 2014 that had more unvaccinated students than vaccinated, according to a recent Los Angeles Times report. For example, just six of Whitethorn Elementary's 11 kindergartners had all their immunizations; at Mattole Valley Charter School it was 26 out of 64 kindergartners; Arcata's Coastal Grove Charter School saw just 14 of 33 kindergartners up to date with their immunizations. Some school officials have expressed concern about what the new law — which will go into effect prior to the start of the 2016-2017 school year — will mean for enrollment numbers, the fear being some parents may pull their kids from school rather than vaccinate them.

Specifically, the new law will mandate that all children in K-12 schools (both public and private), licensed daycare facilities and pre-schools be up to date with the Centers for Disease Control's recommended schedule for 10 vaccinations, including measles, mumps, pertussis, rubella, tetanus, diphtheria and hepatitis B.

Choosing The Right Medical Cannabis

Can be confusing at first with so many different and unusual names and choices. That being said, it is much easier to find a medical cannabis product that will work for you once you have figured out what your desired effect is.

We are learning so much more about this wonderful plant all the time. We now know that aspects of cannabis such as the flavor, contributes to the effect. Remember, "The nose knows" – So trust your instincts and keep a personal cannabis journal to note how certain strains affect you. One very important factor in choosing the right medicine for yourself is that each strain has a limit to the amount and type of cannabinoids that can be received by your body at a certain time. This is why you gain a tolerance faster to certain strains and others seem to medicate the same way for longer. By choosing to use different strains, and different methods of ingestions, such as using edibles or vaporizing, it is easier to keep your cannabinoid receptors fresh and ready to be activated by the next type of medicine you are using. This will help you conserve your medicine and get the maximum effect from it, and it can also help to reach the desired cannabinoid balance you are looking for. Each patient has an individual reaction to each type of medicine tried, and experimentation with different types of strains and methods of use is essential for the new patient.

In very little time, you'll be able to determine what works best for you. We are here to help you find what will work best for your needs. Please feel free to come to us with any questions or concerns. We believe in the "Heart of Humboldt" and professional and compassionate care is what you will always receive here.

Pot Ordinance Catches Supes by Surprise

By Grant Scott-Goforth
newsroom@northcoastjournal.com

Just weeks after the board of supervisors agreed to craft an outdoor medical marijuana cultivation ordinance, county staff has released a detailed draft ordinance that would create a strict permitting plan for the county's cannabis cultivators.

It's a remarkably fast turnaround for a staff that shared concerns that it wouldn't be able to get regulations on the books by next year. But the draft has raised concerns from the county supervisors tasked with bringing an ordinance to fruition.

At a Sept. 15 board meeting, California Cannabis Voice Humboldt treasurer Luke Bruner urged the county to take action to regulate outdoor cannabis grows, while saying his organization would relinquish its year-long, multi-draft attempt to create a law — which CCVH at one point said it would put before voters if the county didn't approve it.

At the meeting, county staff and supervisors said it would be difficult to draft a law, put it through the public vetting process and enact it by March 1, when new statewide medical marijuana regulations go into effect.

The quick release of the draft ordinance, accompanied by a 66-page mitigated negative declaration, indicates the county may have been working on its own law for some time. But supervisors Estelle Fennell and Ryan Sundberg, assigned to an ad hoc committee to create outdoor cultivation regulations, complained that the draft was different than what they anticipated.

Speaking on the phone recently, Fennell said the supervisors had asked county planning and counsel staff to draft an ordinance based on the CCVH framework and input from environmental groups. But the draft itself doesn't read much like the final iteration of the CCVH draft. CCVH spokesperson Andy Powell told the board of supervisors at its Oct. 13 meeting that the ordinance created "an entry point so burdensome" that cultivators will continue to operate in the black market.

Of most concern to Fennell is the draft ordinance's requirement that people operating grows larger than 2,000 square feet obtain a conditional use permit, which she said may "prove too onerous for people who want to come into compliance."

She also noted the draft doesn't touch on the agricultural commissioner's role in enforcing the ordinance.

Among the highlights of the ordinance:

- Cannabis can only be grown on certain land use zones designated agriculture exclusive or rural residential agriculture.
- Conditional use permits may be issued for grows on commercial timberland, forestry recreation or timber production zones only if the sites existed prior to Sept. 1, 2015 and are brought into compliance with state and county codes.
- Grows with cultivation areas larger than 10,000 square feet will only be allowed on general agriculture parcels 5 acres or larger with particular soils and less than 15-percent slopes. They will also have to provide documented water rights or non-diversionary water sources.
- The ordinance as drafted contains a complicated tier structure for grows located on different types of parcels and ranging up to 43,560 square feet in canopy size.
- Cannabis cultivation will not be principally permitted — grows from 500 to 2,000 square feet will require a "special permit," while smaller grows will require zoning clearance certificates.
- Permit applications will require detailed cultivation plans, photos of the operation prior to Sept. 1 2015, consent of parcel owners, setback plans, consent for onsite inspections, and agreement not to divert water between March 1 and Oct. 30.

The bill will be reviewed by the county planning commission on Nov. 5. Fennell says the supervisors have asked the commission to complete its review of the draft by the beginning of January — giving the commission two regularly scheduled meetings to do so. ●

The life and death of Richard Frederick Tis'mil Estrada

By Thadeus Greenson
thad@northcoastjournal.com

Carleana Estrada made this sign for her twin brother, Richie.
Thadeus Greenson

When the phone rang at California Highway Patrol Officer Tim Gray's Willow Creek residence at 1:41 a.m. on Dec. 18, 2014, a dispatcher asked him to respond to a single car accident nearby, but he wasn't told the car involved had been reported stolen almost six hours earlier. When he arrived at the scene to find a wrecked blue Nissan Sentra near a snapped power pole, he didn't know the driver — Richard Frederick Tis'mil Estrada — had been the subject of a frantic 911 call the night before. When Gray got out of his patrol car and casually approached Estrada, he had no idea the 17-year-old from Hoopa was bipolar and in the midst of a manic — and potentially psychotic — episode. He didn't know Estrada's family had tried to have him admitted to a mental hospital the day before, or that his behavior had grown increasingly erratic and worrisome.

Had Gray known all this, the outcome that morning may have been different. Richie may not have raised a machete and attacked Gray with it, catching him off guard, as officials allege. Gray may not have lost a finger on his left hand, broken his arm and suffered facial lacerations. He may also not have raised his gun and fired 11 times, shooting Richie in the head, torso and arm. The teenager may not have died on the side of State Route 299 that morning, and the officer's life may not have been forever altered.

Earlier this month, Humboldt County District Attorney Maggie Fleming issued a three-page report announcing she won't be charging Gray in the case, concluding that the officer had feared for his life and acted in self-defense. While the report is thorough and includes numerous witness accounts, it raises as many questions as it answers. Similarly, hours of interviews with Estrada's family paint a detailed and nuanced picture of a young life filled with promise but plagued by the onset of mental illness. Why did a tight-knit family that seemingly tried so hard to find Richie proper care get so little support?

"I don't think there's a whole lot of blame to any one person," said Gerold Drucker, a licensed psychotherapist who saw Richie weekly until his death. "It's a system failure. He fell through a whole lot of cracks."

"I don't think there's a whole lot of blame to any one person. It's a system failure. He fell through a whole lot of cracks."

By all accounts, Richie was a good kid. He had perfect attendance in school, where he was on the honor roll and named valedictorian of his eighth grade class. His peers voted him president of his freshman class at Hoopa High School. He had a summer job at the radio station, where he recorded public service announcements and tribal stories, often showing up early and leaving late.

He stuck up for his sister and took care of his grandmother. "He was the one who swept my floor, who made my bed, did my wash," Michele McCardie, Richie's grandmother, recalled recently at her daughter's home. Richie was socially adept and confident, whether with adults or his peers. He ran in multiple circles and was "very popular," according to Joseph Orozco, the station manager at KIDE FM who said Richie would have made a good producer, that he "knew how to put together sounds."

John Pinto taught Richie math, science and social studies over the course of two years at Trinity Valley Elementary and remembers him fondly as a thoughtful, good-humored and peaceful kid. He recalled one day when he found a pile of graduation announcements on his desk. "Among those announcements, I received a letter from Richie that thanked me for my dedication and my patience through the rigorous academic work," Pinto said in an email to the Journal. "This kind, respectful regard shined bright in my heart. It is rare to receive a thank you from a middle school student, especially a heartfelt letter of gratitude. But that's something Richie would do."

Richie's mother Leanne Estrada said her son was a born mediator. "When his friends had problems, they went to him," she said, adding that Richie was also prone to giving friends clothes and shoes from his closet. “We have many people in our community who believe his voice was that of our ancestors.” Carleana, Richie’s twin sister, said she used to tell him, “I wish other guys our age were more like you.”

Leanne Estrada said from the day he and Carleana were born — Dec. 8, 1997 — Richie was different. “His personality was so strong, so intense,” she said. “From the time he was crawling, he was just so determined.” Born to Leanne and Carlos Estrada in Los Angeles County, Richie moved to Hoopa when he and Carleana were 2. Leanne wanted to get them and their two older siblings, Carlos Jr. and Celina, out of the city and back to the land where she’d grown up. Leanne swapped her job as a children’s social worker in LA to become a counselor in the Hoopa tribe’s social safety net program.

Richie, Leanne said, took after his grandfather, LeRoy McCardie, a strong-willed man who was the Humboldt County Sheriff’s Office’s first Native American deputy. Richie even wanted to be a cop, Leanne said, until he injured his spine lifting weights as a freshman, ending his short athletic career. But Richie seemed to adapt well to the injury, Leanne said. He was often in pain, but he dedicated himself to studying health and decided he wanted to be a doctor. For a digital storytelling workshop put on by the tribe in 2013, Richie described his new goal. “It makes me happy to make people happy, as if I was born with helping hands,” he said.

But things began to change in early 2014, when Richie started to withdraw at school. He’d be respectful and engaged in the classroom, Leanne said, but he stopped doing his homework and studying. At first, Leanne said, she worked with teachers and counselors at the school, trying to get Richie to re-engage. When that didn’t seem to be working, she knew something was wrong.

Carleana was diagnosed as bipolar while she and Richie were in fourth or fifth grade, and their father had long dealt with the illness, so the concept

In some cases, the episodes can be accompanied by psychotic symptoms, too, causing hallucinations or delusions. "The psychotic symptoms tend to reflect the person's extreme mood," reads a report by the National Institute of Mental Health. "For example, if you are having psychotic symptoms during a manic episode, you may believe you are a famous person, have a lot of money, or have special powers. If you are having psychotic symptoms during a depressive episode, you may believe you are ruined and penniless, or you have committed a crime."

Drucker assisted with getting Richie diagnosed, but he's not a psychiatrist and isn't licensed to prescribe drugs or order and evaluate blood work, all of which can be crucial in treating bipolar disorder. "For someone with psychosis, psychotherapy can be helpful, but it's not the primary treatment," Drucker said. "The primary treatment is anti-psychotic medication, and it can work wonders."

Knowing he likely needed medication, Drucker referred Richie to a psychiatrist, who are in very short supply in Humboldt County, and virtually nonexistent in the valley, where the tribe relies on tele-psychiatry, which connects patients by live video to psychiatrists at the University of California Davis. The doctor put Richie on lithium, a mood stabilizer known to even out bipolar patients' mood swings. But lithium requires close monitoring and follow-up blood work to arrive at a personalized dose that works for the patient. "That makes or breaks the outcome and, in Richie's case, I don't think the right dose was ever arrived at," Drucker said.

Richie's symptoms worsened at home.

Leanne said his social circle began to shrink and his sleep patterns became more irregular. Leanne said she was able to get Richie in to see a doctor at Hoopa's K'imaw Medical Center. That doctor said he'd refer the teen to a tele-psychiatry session that never got scheduled. Frustrated and growing desperate, Leanne brought Richie to the coast to see someone at Humboldt County Mental Health but, according to Drucker, the doctor didn't have the relationship with Richie that would earn his trust and candor and ensure a proper diagnosis.

"A lot of people know if they talk crazy, or talk about what's really going on, they're going to be put in (Semper-virens)," Drucker said. "They don't want to be put in S.V., so they're unrevealing about the extent of their psychosis and paranoia." That issue, Drucker said, can be compounded when talking about people from Hoopa who "have reason to distrust outsiders based on a sordid history of interactions with white people."

When Richie's symptoms continued to worsen over the ensuing weeks, Leanne grew worried. She got her son on the waiting list for another appointment at Humboldt County Mental Health, which reportedly only had one child psychiatrist and patients waiting months to be seen. She said she pestered K'imaw for a follow-up appointment, and even got Richie on waiting lists to see private practice psychiatrists on the coast and in Redding.

But as the Estradas waited, Richie got worse. In December of 2014, he stopped sleeping. His behavior grew more erratic. Leanne said he stopped taking pain medication for his back and instead started smoking marijuana, which some studies have shown can intensify bipolar episodes. Carleana recalled seeing

"Where was law enforcement for five and a half hours? Where were they?"

The day before, Richie had been to his weekly appointment to see Drucker and Leanne said the psychologist had noted the boy seemed restless and agitated, and that he feared the lithium wasn't working. Leanne said Drucker told her to keep a close eye on Richie and to act quickly if his behavior continued to deteriorate.

On Dec. 17, 2014, Richie had his last session with Drucker, who said the teenager seemed "clearly psychotic" and came across as tired and confused. "He wasn't well-oriented in time, day, date and purpose," Drucker said. "He was out of it." Drucker said Leanne also told him that Richie had recently taken to carrying around a knife, which was concerning but not alarming, given he didn't have a history of violence. Still, Drucker walked away from the session concerned. "My last words to Leanne were, 'If you even wonder about if he's a danger to himself or others, don't wait,'" Drucker said.

Later that day, Carleana told her mom that she'd heard from someone that Richie had taken psychedelic mushrooms a few days earlier. Worried, she told her mom. For Leanne, this was the last straw and she called Sempervirens, where staff told her to bring Richie in for an evaluation. She said she brought the family together for a type of intervention to convince Richie to come with her to the mental health facility. It was a Wednesday, and the family gathered in the evening outside their home, readied themselves to talk to Richie and walked inside together. Carlos Estrada Jr. said Richie was coming out of the bathroom holding a golf club when the family walked in. He said his younger brother made eye contact with them, threw the golf club to the side as a diversion and ran by them out of the house. He got into Leanne's blue Nissan Sentra and drove away.

That was the last time anyone in the Estrada family saw Richie alive.

Panicked, Carleana and Leanne called 911 at 8:51 p.m. The call was answered by a California Highway Patrol dispatcher and then forwarded to a Hoopa Valley Tribal Police dispatcher. Carleana and Leanne reported that Richie, potentially under the influence, was mentally ill and in the midst of a manic episode and that he'd stolen the family car. Leanne said she was told by both dispatchers that an officer would respond to the residence to take a report, so she waited. But no one showed up and no one called.

"Where was law enforcement for five and a half hours?" she asked calmly, sitting in her sister's house on a recent afternoon, the sun trickling through a shaded window and highlighting the streaks of gray in her black hair. "Where were they?"

Officer Tim Gray was just two weeks into his new job when the call came in at 1:41 a.m. on Dec. 18. He'd been with the Highway Patrol for a couple of years in the San Francisco area, but had only recently taken on a resident officer post for the Humboldt Office in early December.

Through a CHP spokesperson, Gray declined to be interviewed for this story, citing an ongoing threat of litigation. After granting an initial interview request, CHP also declined to comment further on the incident.

CHP spokesman Cy May probably understands what Gray went through that night better than most, as May grew up in the valley and went to Hoopa High School before holding CHP's resident officer post out there for four years. (He just recently gave it up to move to the coast and take over as the office's media contact.)

May said the resident officer doesn't get any special perks — no housing allowance or hefty base pay. The incentive, he said, is that the post allows an officer to really get to know the community he or she serves. It also brings the prospect of a lot of overtime pay. The way it works, according to May, is that the resident officers are assigned a regular shift and patrol but when they clock out at the end of a shift, they remain on call until the next morning.

"It was hard for me to sleep, personally. You're just waiting for the phone to ring."

— Cy May,
CHP Spokesman

"I'd get home, get out of the uniform and put it away, and just try to relax," May said, adding that he'd often go to sleep at night looking at the phone on his nightstand. "It was hard for me to sleep, personally. You're just waiting for the phone to ring."

After getting the 1:41 a.m. call from dispatch reporting that a blue car had crashed into a power pole east of Willow Creek about eight minutes earlier, Gray got in uniform and left the house. A little more than 20 minutes after the call, he arrived at the scene of the crash. He drove past the Sentra to survey for other damage or vehicles before making a U-turn, circling back and parking near the Estradas' car. According to the official report, Gray called dispatch to ask that Pacific Gas and Electric be notified of the downed pole. He didn't, however, call in the license plate number of the Sentra, which likely would have brought up the Estrada family's 911 call from the night before.

The official report from the district attorney's office detailing what happened after Gray got out of the car is brutal, and contains witness accounts of Richie taking him by surprise with the 16-inch machete — a tool Leanne kept in her car to cut back brambles in her driveway to keep it from scratching the car's paint — and attacking Gray repeatedly until the officer opened fire.

The Estrada family has a hard time reconciling the level of violence contained in the report with what they knew of Richie. "My son must have feared for his life," Carlos Estrada said, adding that his son was a gentle, non-violent soul.

Exactly why Gray didn't have a better picture of the situation he was walking into remains somewhat unclear. May said CHP typically does briefings at the beginning of each shift; a commander will catch patrol officers up on the reports of interest and active be-on-the-lookout bulletins. Dispatchers will also commonly send out computer briefings over patrol cars' computer systems as well, May said. But, when an off-duty officer is called out, May said he or she doesn't receive the same briefings. May added that he "didn't know where the lapse of communication was" on the morning of Dec. 18.

A blood draw taken from Richie's body came back positive for marijuana and sub-therapeutic doses of lithium. Humboldt County Deputy Coroner Trevor Enright said it's impossible to know whether the low lithium levels were due to Richie's not having been prescribed a sufficient dose, his going off the medication or because some of the drug had already cycled through his blood before the test. One thing that is certain, Enright said, is that no traces of psychedelic mushrooms were found in his blood. While this means Richie wasn't under the influence of the psychedelic substance at the time of his death, it doesn't rule out the possibility he'd taken them days earlier, as the drug generally leaves the body within a matter of days, if not hours.

In a phone interview from his office on the coast, Drucker said Richie's death hit him hard, and pointed to it as part of the reason he's now semi-retired and no longer working in Hoopa. "I felt like, if I have to deal with truly psychotic people and I don't have adequate resources and backup, then I can't do it," he said. "I care about my clients."

Drucker said it's clear psychiatrists are in demand countywide, but the need is critically acute in Hoopa, which really needs a resident psychiatrist to learn the culture and build relationships. "That would do a tremendous amount of good in the valley," he said. "You need a consistent relationship, a trusting relationship," he said. "Until we have that, there are going to be more tragedies like Richie's."

Sitting at the dining room table of her sister's house with Richie's pictures spread across a table in front of her, Leanne Estrada said she wants to honor her son's life through The Richie Effect, a nonprofit the family is forming. Once up and running, she said the organization has plans to build a skate park in Hoopa to give young people a healthy outlet, and is looking to invest in health education and music programs. Ultimately, Leanne said she believes Richie came to this world to make it better and she's intent on carrying that mission forward.

But she's also still looking for answers. She wants to know exactly why neither CHP nor the tribal police responded to her 911 call, and why Gray — a new officer to the area — didn't receive word that there was a juvenile, potentially on drugs and in a state of mental health crisis, driving unlicensed in a stolen vehicle. She also wants to know why none of the psychiatrists she contacted could make time to see Richie as his mental health spiraled out of control.

"I want to make sure people understand that this could happen to you," she said, pausing. "This is not an isolated thing. ... This can't continue anymore. The mask needs to come off."

Leanne's voice cracks and she chokes back tears as she describes the months immediately following her son's death, a dark period in which she said she couldn't manage to do much of anything. But now, 10 months later, she said she's connected with a network of other people who have lost loved ones to officer-involved shootings. She feels strong now, empowered to fight for information until she understands exactly what happened to her son. Leanne said the family still hasn't seen autopsy and police reports, or other evidence from the investigation, all of which it has repeatedly requested and now is the subject of pending California Public Records Act requests.

Leanne said her fear is that her 911 call was dismissed by officers and dispatchers alike as just another report of "some Hoopa boy" acting out. A lawsuit, or lawsuits, may ultimately be the only way to get everything out in the open, she said.

"It takes a strong person to follow through with that — luckily I am," she said. "If that has to become my life, it will become my life. ... My son was not just some passing Hoopa boy." ●

Boeing Boeing at Ferndale Rep

By David Jervis

frontrow@northcoastjournal.com

Prior to seeing it in Ferndale, Boeing Boeing was a play I only knew through the 1966 film version with Tony Curtis and Jerry Lewis — “The Big Comedy of Nineteen Sixty-SEX!” shouted the tagline on the poster. That line is enough to indicate that the film and the play belonged to that era of swingin’ bachelors, martini shakers and married gentlemen who were not just key-holders at The Playboy Club, but regulars.

So it’s certainly a product of its time, having run for seven years in London’s West End, but it’s also a product of a much earlier time, with Marc Camoletti’s play being a classic farce in every sense of the word, right down to the total number of doors slammed — which is pretty much impossible to keep up with — and also its French setting. That setting, specifically, is the 1962 Parisian flat of American playboy Bernard, who has developed a perfect system for his lifestyle: He’s engaged to three different flight attendants (for whom we are reminded the preferred term back in that period was “air host-ess”), and has managed to jerry-rig his schedule with theirs so that only one is in Paris at any given time, and they consider his home to be theirs during layovers.

Assisting in this fiction is his long-suffering French housekeeper Bertha, who assists with everything from switching the photographs of the fiancées for their stays, to making sure the right food is on hand for the respective tastes of TWA’s Gloria, Alitalia’s Gabriella and Lufthansa’s Gretchen. Into this milieu comes his less suave old friend from back in the states, Robert, who marvels at Bernard’s apparent skill in pulling off such an arrangement. However, this being the realm of farce, Robert’s arrival dovetails early in the first act of with the well-scheduled timetables getting thrown awry. It’s a full 33 minutes until Bernard actually gets struck in the face by a door,

True to period, the non-American characters are all drawn and portrayed with exaggerated elements of their corresponding national stereotypes (Gallic rudeness, Mediterranean feistiness and Teutonic overbearingness), which keeps things in comic gear, along with the blonde Texas belle that is TWA’s Gloria. Any weakness to the play belongs to the datedness of its material, but that is mostly negated by the fast pace of the comic hijinks, as well as the fact that the basic premise and humor are things that could’ve clicked just as well in Molière’s time. Also, devoid of any leering, nudge-nudge laughs, Boeing Boeing holds up years later as a good candidate for restaging.

Dell’Arte alum Ryan Musil keeps the proceedings going at a most lively clip, and as Bernard and Robert, Chris Hamby and Evan Needham play off each other and the rest of the cast well. Needham actually has more stage time, as he’s forced to fend with the almost-but-not-quite-intersections of the three fiancées, who are played with great zip. Alyssa Hughlett (an honest to golly-Texan) has a second-act bit with Needham involving a surreal exchange and some literal acrobatics that must be seen to be believed, and Julia Hjerpe nails her marks (and her Italian accent) deftly. But it is Alexandra Bloiun’s Gretchen who carries the day. Like a force of nature who seems about nine feet high onstage at times, Bloiun — another Dell’Arte grad — makes her FRT debut a thing to behold, using her body as a perfectly tuned instrument of physical comedy on everything from pratfalls to brandishing a table above her head, bel-lowing out in a perfect fraulein accent such lines as “I must keep zee fires of passion burning vithin me!” And as Bertha, fellow Dell’Artian Kaitlen Osburn does a great job as the eye-rolling, sarcastic Parisian maid.

Kudos go to Linnie Horrigan’s costumes, which include some dazzling re-creations of early-1960s flight attendant uniforms, including Gloria’s appropriately red-white-and-blue ensemble. And credit must also go to Carl McGahan’s sets, which successfully withstand so many slamming doors, all the while looking quite Parisian.

All in all, and especially for holding up better than I thought it might, Boeing Boeing is a crowd-pleasing romp, taking place over the course of a single day, emboldened by good practitioners of physical comedy who compensate for some brief lags in the original material. Besides, what’s not to like about a play that ends with a pillow fight?

Boeing Boeing* plays at 8 p.m. Fridays and Saturdays with Sunday matinees at 2 p.m. through Oct. 25. For tickets and information call 786-5483 or go to www.ferndalerep.org.

Chocolate avocado pudding in a flash

By Heather Jo Flores

tabletalk@northcoastjournal.com

We can't grow chocolate or avocados in Humboldt County, but of all the ways in which we indulge in imported resources, these are two of the most nutritious, delicious and versatile treats. Combine them, toss in a few more ingredients and you get: vegan, raw, gluten-free, sugar-free, high-protein, antioxidant avocado chocolate pudding!

Say it three times without stopping — that's how long it will take you throw together this tasty and healthy family favorite. I invented it while trying to eat healthier a few years ago. It's just about 300 calories per serving, packed with protein and other nutrients. Eat it for breakfast or as a dessert. I know you'll love chocomole as much as I do.

Chocomole

Serves two.

Ingredients and method:

1 avocado

¼ cup unsweetened milk (almond, coconut, cow or goat)

¼ cup maple syrup or honey

1 teaspoon vanilla extract

2 tablespoons unsweetened cocoa powder

2 tablespoons powdered hemp seed

2 tablespoons almond, hazelnut, cashew or peanut butter (try different versions and see what you like best)

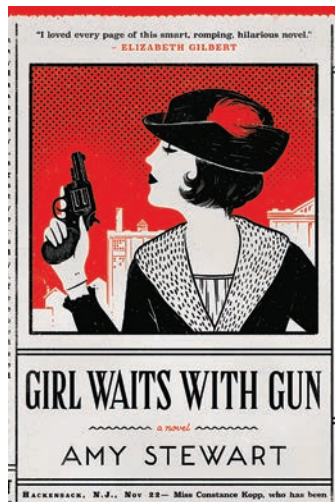

Optional add-ins: flax or almond oil, dates, walnuts, sunflower seeds, mint, coconut, cinnamon

Place all ingredients in a blender (my Mini Magic Bullet works well) and blend until smooth. Add more milk as needed, incorporating one tablespoon at a time so the mixture is loose enough not to clog the blender. If you want a smoother pudding, add more milk, or try flax or almond oil. For a chunkier treat, fold in finely-chopped dates, seeds or nuts.

Pour the pudding into small bowls and serve. A dollop of yogurt or a sprinkle of coconut or cinnamon make nice toppings.

More in the mood for a milkshake? Starting with the above recipe, omit the nut butter and use a full cup of milk. If you're feeling really frisky, add a scoop of chocolate-flavored Coconut Bliss. Blend until frothy and serve with a straw.

Girl Waits with Gun

By Amy Stewart

Reviewed by Bill Cassel

Amy Stewart is familiar to most people in Humboldt County as A) co-owner of Eureka Books and B) a successful author of nonfiction, most recently the bestselling The Drunken Botanist. (She's also a former Journal columnist.) Now she has decided to try her hand at fiction with the historical novel Girl Waits with Gun.

But GWG is not set on the North Coast, or even in California; instead it takes place in New Jersey early in the 20th century. Based on real newspaper accounts of the era, it tells the story of one Constance Kopp, who took up arms to protect herself and her sisters from the ne'er-do-well scion of a textile manufacturing family.

The action starts with a bang, when the horse-drawn buggy carrying Constance and her sisters Norma and Fleurette collides with a recklessly driven automobile. Behind the wheel is Henry Kaufman, a wealthy "silk man": exploiter of workers, defiler of women and general menace to society. When the Koppes demand restitution for the damage, Kaufman begins a campaign of harassment against them and we're off.

The sisters live alone on a farm, much to the chagrin of their brother, who doesn't think they can look after themselves. And herein lies the central question of the novel: can they or can't they? It's no spoiler, I don't think, to say that Constance — who narrates — emerges as the heroine. There she is on the cover, looking a bit more glamorous than you might think from the way she's described inside (marketing's call, no doubt). Constance is formidable but vulnerable, bold and forthright, yet tender-hearted. She also has a "shameful" secret, but that's not going to stop many readers from rooting for her.

She makes for a compelling and sympathetic protagonist, a woman hemmed in by the circumstances of her times but unwilling to meekly accept the limitations imposed upon her by society. Refreshingly, romance is not one of her major concerns; she just wants for her sisters and herself to be able to live lives of their own choosing. Her code of conduct is simple and straightforward: "We have to be part of the world in which we live. We don't scurry away when we're in trouble, or when someone else is. We don't run and hide."

"Simple and straightforward" would describe Amy Stewart's prose style as well. She communicates clearly and directly, mostly avoiding $10 words and complicated locutions. This book will not be filed in the Young Adult section, but young people could easily read it, and may be entertained enough not to notice that they're being taught some history and absorbing messages of female empowerment.

Girl Waits with Gun wears its feminism on its sleeve and also dabbles in class conflict. A recent, violently suppressed strike by silk workers figures in the plot, as does Kaufman's habit of taking advantage of his female employees. There's not a lot of moral ambiguity here — as with the cover illustration, there's black and white and a bit of red, but not many shades of gray. That could be a weakness or a strength depending on what you're looking for in your reading material.

Meticulously researched and plotted, this book is almost too perfectly constructed, but enlivened by its characters. In addition to Constance, we meet dour, stubborn, pigeon-loving Norma and innocent, flighty Fleurette. White male villain Kaufman is counterbalanced by kindly Sheriff Heath, who not only encourages the sisters to defend themselves, but even provides them with revolvers. (Apparently "community policing" meant something a little different in the 1910s.)

In the end, though modern in its outlook, Girl Waits with Gun is thoroughly old-fashioned in form as well as setting. It tells a clear story with a beginning, middle, and end ... though the end hints broadly at sequels to come. That means spending more time in New Jersey, something I generally try to avoid, but in this case it's a welcome prospect. ●

When in Rome

If music be the food of love, then play on

By Andy Powell

thesetlist@northcoastjournal.com

I wrote in a previous column about the rather common financial situation in which local bands and music venues find themselves. Not only do bands and venues have a lot in common, they also exist in a type of symbiotic relationship. That is, they need each other. Now, it's easy to complain about the $14 you and each of your bandmates made for a gig. It's also easy to assume the venue you just rocked probably made a fortune. The truth is, unless you royally got screwed by the venue (which is rare around here), the venue's probably not sitting that much prettier than you are. Did they make more money than your band? Let's hope so, but also be glad you don't have to pay thousands of dollars in payroll tax every month. But I digress.

I got to sit down this past Sunday with Kate Martin, owner of the famous Logger Bar in Blue Lake, and get caught up on the trials and tribulations facing said bar. You may be familiar with the recent saga, but if not, the uber-condensed version goes: A handful of folks living close to the Logger don't like the fact that music happens there after 10 p.m. on weekend nights — which, as an olive branch, Kate cuts off around midnight instead of 1:30 a.m. — or that some patrons of the bar occasionally and mysteriously get intoxicated and talk loudly after leaving the joint. They've complained and called the fuzz repeatedly, and then later had to face a hundred Logger Bar supporters at a city council meeting.

Bummer? Sure. No one likes drunk strangers being all irritating late at night. But is the answer to try and stop the music and prevent folks from getting tipsy at a bar? Hell ... wait, let me admit my bias up front before answering. I'm a musician, and one that has been gigging at the Logger since the "Brenda Days." I love the now-immaculate place. Okay, with that out of the way ... hell no!

I used to live above the Minor Theater in Arcata. You know what? It got pretty loud there on H Street, especially around 2 a.m. Did it bug me? Sometimes it did! Did I get tired of drunk-ass bros waking me up with their loud stumble mouths and knuckles all a-draggin'? Hell yeah I did. Did I ever call Arcata Pizza & Deli (APD) and ask them to not stay open so late? Never. Did I ever call the Arcata Police Department (APD) because idiots woke me up? Nope. Did I ever yell at those filled with life and liquor to "Pipe the f*ck down!"? Yeah. I did that a lot. But it ended there. It all came with the turf. I lived "downtown." That was an unfortunate byproduct of living fabulously near the heart of Arcata. It was worth every drunken fool and every earplug I ever bought. Now I live a few blocks from the Logger. I couldn't be happier.

The Logger Bar and other local venues provide a vital support network for bands, music lovers, art, culture and even a tax base for the community. In turn, bands and lovers of music, art and culture provide a vital support network for music venues and small businesses. Get rid of the music, you get rid of the venue. Get rid of the venue, you get rid of the music.

We're all in this together. And if you ever find yourself in Rome, try not to complain about the ruins.

Friday

The weekend seems a bit sparse as far as music goes (at least according to emails I've received), but if you want to get your dance on, head over to the Arcata Theater Lounge. At 9:30 p.m. you can shimmy and shake to Danny Corn, Zanapod, Dub Cowboy, & DeeJay Pressure. Bring $5 so they'll let you in.

A bit further away, you can hear Doug Fir & the 2x4s in a relaxed setting at the Fieldbrook General Store. They'll be starting around 7:30 p.m. and don't require any of your dough for this show.

Wishing it was already Halloween? Well, keep waiting, but there is something called the "Hip-Hop Halloween" at Humboldt Brews with Grasshoppa, Mike D, Masta Shredda and B. Swizlo. 8:30 p.m. and $5 cover charge. Test out your costume, I guess.

Saturday

The Westhaven Center for the Arts is featuring "Songs from the Center: An Evening with Tim Breed and Josephine Johnson." Believe it or not, it features songwriter in residence Tim Breed and Josephine Johnson. Hear these songwriting pros at 6:30 p.m. and, if you're a member, it's only $7. Everyone else: $10.

If country and Americana is more your thing, the Siren's Song Tavern will be your destination. Local enigma Cliff Dallas with the Death Valley Troubadours welcome newest troubadour Jake (formerly of Rooster McClintock) to the band. Rounding out the bill will be lunar alt-country locals Electro Saloon and solo songsmith Gabe Rozzell. [Full disclosure points: Guess which band my wife's in? Hint: Her name isn't Cliff or Gabe.] This is a free show and it starts at 9 p.m.

Monday

I am told that "electro-thunder-funk jam band" Cure for the Common are in our neck of the woods. All the way out from Bozeman, Montana, these fellas want to stretch out and jam away with you. Expect tunes from their recently released album The Squeeze. They've shared the stage with STS9, Umphrey's McGee, Galactic and a few other notables. So they're probably good. Reward them for coming all this way with your attendance. No word on the price, but I know it's at the Jam in Arcata at 9 p.m.

Full show listings in the Journal's Music and More grid, the Calendar and online. Bands and promoters, send your gig info, preferably with a high-res photo or two, to music@northcoastjournal.com. ●

Andy Powell is a congenital music lover and hosts The Night Show on KWPT 100.3 FM weeknights at 6 p.m.

Smooth out those singles and clear your schedule and your lap 'cause the boys are back in town. Hunks: The Show, an all-male revue, swaggers back to Bear River Casino on Oct. 16 with shows at 7 and 9 p.m. ($20, $50 cocktail table for two). Watch well-oiled, nearly naked men strut their stuff.

If your tastes run a little more refined, catch internationally lauded violinist Bin Huang at Fulkerson Recital Hall, Saturday, Oct. 17 at 8 p.m. ($26, $5 HSU students). Huang won the Junior Wieniawski International Violin Competition in Poland when she was just 14 and has been captivating audiences since. Photo courtesy of the artist.

Festejando Nuestra Salud, LatinoNet's annual Spanish language health fair at Redwood Acres on Oct. 18 from noon to 4 p.m. offers more than just important healthcare screenings (free). It's also a cultural celebration with music, food and kids' activities. But while you're there, get that flu shot, test your cholesterol and blood glucose and see if the kids need glasses. Photo courtesy of LatinoNet.

Invasion of the Body Snatchers

Paranoia, the Destroyer

One of science fiction's best B movies comes to the Eureka Theater on Friday, Oct. 16 at 7:30 p.m. when the original Invasion of the Body Snatchers (1956) drops from the projector and onto the screen ($5). Hang onto your seat. This one'll scare the plants off of you.

Kevin McCarthy plays a doctor who returns to his hometown to find worried people complaining of the same thing: their loved ones aren't quite right. They look the same, but they are flat, expressionless vessels — and the combination is chilling. The doctor discovers that seedpods from outer space have descended upon the town and are replicating its unsuspecting inhabitants, throwing the townsfolk into a paranoid game of “us vs. them.”

This low-budget film was made terrific by taut direction, tense scenes, stellar acting and a hybrid script that is both humorous and terrifying. There's no violence, nothing graphic — just fear building upon fear until panic runs amok. And panic is the monster in this movie. The pods are icky and the soulless replicas are creepy, but the real terror is the crescendo of fright, the fear that this could happen to you, and even worse, while you're asleep and totally unaware. Many consider the film's subtext to be a veiled criticism of McCarthyism and the sweeping hysteria it fed and fed upon. Others claim it's an allegory for Communism turning people into party-line drones devoid of individuality, or a warning about nuclear war (glowing, dehumanizing pods falling from the sky). Whether all of these or none were intended, this type of invasion — something taking over your identity in such an everyday setting — was pioneering in film and sets Invasion apart as one of the most alarming science fiction movies of all time.

Have fun watching this one in the dark, poddy people, but keep one eye on the screen and another on the person next to you. And for heaven's sake don't nod off or you could be next.

Over There

What is life like for veterans returning from war? What happens “over there” and what happens “in here” for those who serve, and for their families? Frequently, returning veterans experience alienation and invisibility as they integrate back into a society that has not experienced what they have. Through a three-part series of workshops over the last several months, the Arcata Playhouse and area creators and producers put together an impressive, important piece giving voice to the experiences, changes and challenges for this oftentimes silent faction of our community. Echoes of War, a multimedia performance that documents veterans, their families and survivors of war and their experiences of coming home, plays at the Arcata Playhouse on Oct. 22 through Oct. 24 at 7 p.m., and at 2 p.m. on Oct. 25. ($10, $8 for veterans).

Local storyteller Ali Freedlund held workshops where veterans and those affected by war shared their experiences and, with her help, fine-tuned them for presentation. Stories include those of Vietnam War veterans, a National Guardsman who served in Afghanistan, a Bosnian Muslim who fled her home in Sarajevo, a Jewish woman who escaped Nazi Germany, a veteran of the Iraq War and a Navy veteran who participates in the Run to the Wall every Memorial Day. Participants also had their photos and stories captured for local audio archive and the Library of Congress by audio engineer Tammy Rae Scott.

For the performance at the Playhouse, directors Zuzka Sabata and Jacqueline Dandeneau bring together the narrative pieces, visual images and live music representing the different war eras to create the final production. The playhouse will also be draped in large banners from “A Break in the Battle,” a project from Fort Benning depicting soldiers, their tattoos and the stories behind them.

Finally, a compilation of a recording of the live performances at the Playhouse and the archived tapes will be broadcast on KHSU on Veteran's Day, Nov. 11 at 7 p.m.

Men obsessed in The Walk and Digging for Fire

By David Jervis

Reviews

THE WALK. You might remember that back on Aug. 7, 1974, a Frenchman named Philippe Petit walked for about 45 minutes on a high-wire cable strung between the tops of the World Trade Center towers in New York City. I do — it was all over the news that night and the paper the next morning, and as a 6-year-old, I thought it was the coolest thing I’d ever seen. Unfortunately, this was the same week that President Nixon was resigning, and I recall being annoyed about that less important-seeming spectacle crowding it out of the news, and that the grown-ups around me seemed much more focused on that particular event.

It’s more likely you recall this remarkable event of Petit’s from James Marsh’s amazing Oscar-winning 2008 documentary Man on Wire, which used interviews, historical footage and some clever cinematic touches to tell the story of how it all happened, playing out like a great heist film. But in a time when remakes and reboots abound in Hollywoodland, it’s not at all surprising to find that winning an Academy Award doesn’t mean that a room full of people can decide that same story could work even better as a feature.

And that’s just what veteran techo-whiz director Robert Zemeckis (Flight, Cast Away) does here, and he does a fairly admirable job. Joseph Gordon-Levitt also does better than expected, pulling off a French accent that isn’t distracting or clumsy, considering I didn’t even think about it until the ride home from the theater. The backstory of how he became fixated on making the walk is interesting without dragging, and we get to learn some not-uninteresting things about equipment like cavaletti and guide lines, some of it delivered by Ben Kingsley, who plays a mentor to Petit.

But you won’t really remember any of that later. The back half of the film that involves the night-before preparation and the walk itself is what you would expect from Zemeckis, and it goes without saying that anyone with acrophobia should stay at home — the high-wire act in which Petit variously walked, knelt and lay down on a cable between two 1,350-foot skyscrapers is delivered in great, dizzying detail. The CGI re-creation of the twin towers is seamless and stunning, and there's obviously some poignancy in seeing them reborn on screen. To the film's credit, it doesn't push that link hard at all, because clearly the memory of their destruction is something that any moviegoer will think about upon seeing them.

One great measure of a film is its ability to show you something you've never seen before, be it a world, a subculture or a new perspective. The big problem with The Walk is that it shows anyone who's seen Man on Wire something that they quite literally have seen before, and as a feature topic it's simply not as compelling. Just as the made-for-HBO film Grey Gardens paled in comparison to the epochal 1976 documentary of the same name, The Walk is evidence that the truth is not just stranger than fiction, it's also usually better. PG. 123M. BROADWAY, MILL CREEK.

DIGGING FOR FIRE. Prolific director and veteran of the "mumblecore" filmmaking movement Joe Swanberg (Art History, Happy Christmas) has gotten more polished through the years, and seems to have found a good niche working with much the same group of actors, and also as the characters that populate his films have correspondingly aged from 20-somethings into older (but not necessarily happier), mostly married people in their 30s.

This time it's married couple Tim (Jack Johnson, who also co-scripted with Swanberg) and Lee (Rosemarie DeWitt of Rachel Getting Married), respectively a schoolteacher and yoga instructor with a 3-year-old son. Housesitting for a few weeks in the Los Angeles hills at the swanky home of Lee's client, we see them as happy but in a state of unease over the usual real-world stuff (doing a big pile of taxes on the table, arguing about letting her parents pay for their kid to go to an expensive school), in addition to Tim making a less mundane find — what may be a human bone and an old revolver in the underbrush of their host's property.

Swanberg's film unspools nicely and naturally over the course of a weekend in which Lee goes to leave their son at her folks' house in hope of a night out with a friend. Tim stays behind, most definitely doesn't put a dent in the taxes, invites some friends over and, most importantly, keeps on digging and digging in the backyard, getting more curious as he goes. With its long takes and easy cuts between the spouses as things unfold over the weekend, Digging for Fire is a winning and engaging comedy-drama, bolstered by a great cast that includes Ron Livingston, Melanie Lynskey, Jenny Slate, Orlando Bloom, Anna Kendrick, Mike Birbiglia and Sam Rockwell, who is outstanding and annoying as that one brash, leather-jacketed friend we all have — the one who still hasn't grown out of how he was at 23. NOTICE TO POTENTIAL BIDDERS: If you are considering bidding on this property lien, you should understand that there are risks involved in bidding at a trustee auction. You will be bidding on a lien, not on the property itself. Placing the highest bid at a trustee auction does not automatically entitle you to free and clear ownership of the property. You should also be aware that the lien being auctioned off may be a junior lien. If you are the highest bidder at the auction, you are or may be responsible for paying off all liens senior to the lien being auctioned off, before you can receive clear title to the property. You are encouraged to investigate the existence, priority, and size of outstanding liens that may exist on this property by contacting the county recorder's office or a title insurance company, either of which may charge you a fee for this information. If you consult either of these resources, you should be aware that the same lender may hold more than one mortgage or deed of trust on the property. NOTICE TO PROPERTY OWNER: The sale date shown on this notice of sale may be postponed one or more times by the mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or a court, pursuant to Section 2924g of the California Civil Code. The law requires that information about trustee sale postponements be made available to you and to the public, as a courtesy to those not present at the sale. If you wish to learn whether your sale date has been postponed, and, if applicable, the rescheduled time and date for the sale of this property, you may call the trustee's information line at 530-246-2727 or visit this Internet Web site: calforeclosures.biz, using the file number assigned to this case: TS # 15-2175. Information about postponements that are very short in duration or that occur close in time to the scheduled sale may not immediately be reflected in the telephone information or on the Internet Web site. The best way to verify postponement information is to attend the scheduled sale. THE PETITION requests authority to administer the estate under the Independent Administration of Estates Act. (This authority will allow the personal representative to take many actions without obtaining court approval. Before taking certain very important actions, however, the personal representative will be required to give notice to interested persons unless they have waived notice or consented to the proposed action.) The independent administration authority will be granted unless an interested person files an objection to the petition and shows good cause why the court should not grant the authority. A HEARING on the petition will be held on November 12, 2015 at 2:00 p.m. at the Superior Court of California, County of Humboldt, 825 Fifth Street, Eureka, in Dept.: 8. IF YOU OBJECT to the granting of the petition, you should appear at the hearing and state your objections or file written objections with the court before the hearing. Your appearance may be in person or by your attorney. IF YOU ARE A CREDITOR or a contingent creditor of the decedent, you must file your claim with the court and mail a copy to the personal representative appointed by the court within the later of either (1) four months from the date of first issuance of letters to a general personal representative, as defined in section 58(b) of the California Probate Code, or (2) 60 days from the date of mailing or personal delivery to you of a notice under section 9052 of the California Probate Code. YOU MAY EXAMINE the file kept by the court. If you are a person interested in the estate, you may file with the court a Request for Special Notice (form DE-154) of the filing of an inventory and appraisal of estate assets or of any petition or account as provided in Probate Code section 1250. Clendenen's Cider Works

Clendenen's Cider Works has been a Fortuna staple since 1909, providing Humboldt County with a wide variety of apples as well as 100% natural, pure, unpasteurized apple cider. Originally purchased by Ernest Clifton and May Long Clendenen, the five acre parcel is now run by the third and fourth generation of Clendenen's. Clif and his son Drew continue the tradition making the same cider with the same trees.

Clendenen's also delivers through out Humboldt County during the apple harvest season, including a Murphy's Market near you. For those of you that want to get the product straight from the source, you can pick up some apples or cider from their farm stand located at 96 12th Street in Fortuna. The stand is open Monday – Saturday 9am – 5:30 pm and Sunday 10am – 5pm. The stand is also only open mid-August through January. You can also check out their annual Apple Harvest Festival that takes place the first Saturday in October every year.

For more information about Clendenen's Cider Works including contact information and a very nice history of the family and area, you can go to their website clendenesciderworks.com. Also make sure to look for their products at a Murphy's near you or visit their farm stand and see why the Clendenen's say it is the best glass of cider that you'll ever taste. The Clendenen family would also like to thank the people of Humboldt County for their continued support and look forward to serving Humboldt County in the future.

MONKEYS & BUSINESS

"It is not the strongest of the species that survives, nor the most intelligent, but the one most responsive to change." -Charles Darwin

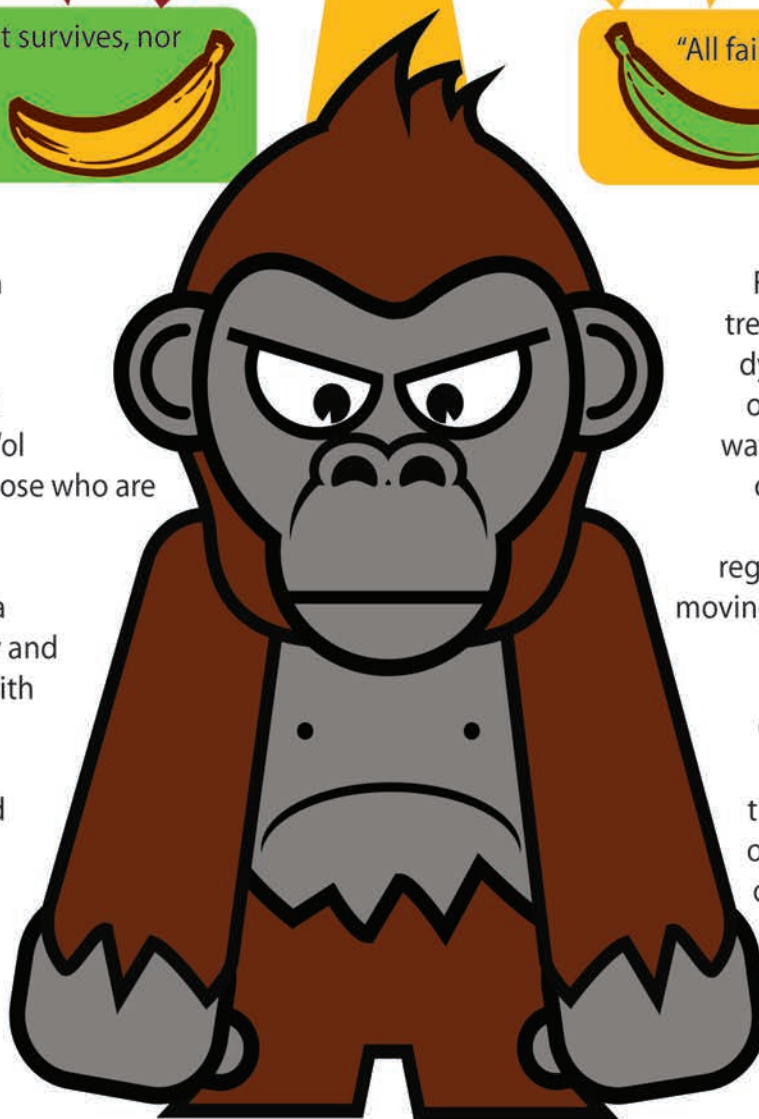

"All failure is failure to adapt, all success is successful adaptation." - Max Mckeown

What do monkeys and business have in common?

Adaptation is the secret to survival and regardless of how you feel about good 'ol Darwin, there's a lot to be said about those who are most responsive to change.

The medical and recreational marijuana industry is the fastest evolving industry and owners are faced with having to deal with change on a regular basis. Although cannabis businesses are reaping the benefits of this booming industry, rapid growth poses a threat. Seasoned entrepreneurs know that fast success can often cause more harm to a business than so-called "failure." Why is this?

Fast industry growth and success brings a tremendous amount of change and shifting dynamics along with it. Cannabis business owners have to navigate the tempestuous waters of day-to-day operations (of multiple operations for some), changing laws, new environmental stipulations, unclear local regulations, etc., and because the industry is moving forward, it speeds all of this up. That's a lot of change to deal with!

On top of all that, as Murphy's Law would have it, things go haywire at the worst of times! Equipment failure, HVAC unit goes out, product spoilage, employee gets hurt on the job... the list goes on. As you read this article, many cannabis farms are struggling to recover from major losses due to fire and current drought conditions make these matters even worse. These are realities that business owners inevitably face, and the businesses that can adapt to these circumstances will outlast those who cannot. Are you in a position to adapt? Will you survive?

SERVICE INTERRUPTION

Many cannabis growers, producers and retailers are transitioning from small "backyard" operations to full fledged businesses consisting of multiple enterprises. Most are beginning to put protections in place to outlast the competition and withstand the demands of the industry. General liability insurance programs have become popular and are a good first start, but many owners are not aware of the other types of coverage that are available to them to ensure their ability to bounce-back after a catastrophe takes place. Have you ever heard of Cyber coverage? If your business is online, or you digitally store patient/client records, this is something to seriously consider. Programs are available to cover service interruptions, "extra expenses" during a "period of restoration," and perishable goods... think about that next time you have a major power outage, or your HVAC unit goes out! There are many more options available. The take-away here is that the only way to survive this evolving industry is to position yourself to adapt.

JUST ANOTHER EXPENSE!

Let's talk straight. When leasing a property, or doing business in a state where insurance isn't required, most marijuana growers, processors, and retailers view insurance as an unnecessary expense. We speak with countless business owners who forego insurance to save. It's like trying to save a few bucks per month by passing on road side assistance.. then suddenly you need a tow, you lock the keys in the car, etc. For a business owner, insurance is something you don't think you need... and then when something happens you realize it how much it would have helped. Our most successful clients understand this and fully insure their operations. We want you to be successful too. Call us with any questions, and we are happy to find you a solution that fits your needs.
